

The state estimated in 2018 that oil development on the NPR-A would cost the state $1.6 billion over a decade in reduced taxes because the state oil tax system allows the expenses to be written off immediately against other production in Alaska.