

Here, the plain text of the statutes clearly authorizes purchasing educational services and materials from private organizations with public funds, in direct contravention of the direct benefit prohibition of the Alaska Constitution. As evidenced by the legislative history of SB 100, the relevant language of which went on to be later enacted as the provisions at issue here, was introduced with two proposed constitutional amendments to change the Alaska Constitution to allow for spending public funds for the direct benefit of private educational institutions.